PROGRAMS

Research programs: CCFA has provided more than $200 million for research on the treatment and cure of inflammatory bowel disease (IBD), and supports ongoing research initiatives and clinical studies.

Education programs: Awareness campaigns, books, newsletters, periodicals, webcasts and a website resource center provide information and education to more than 1.4 million patients and their families. Professional education is offered through workshops for health professionals and through Inflammatory Bowel Diseases, the official journal of CCFA.

Support services: A local support group meets monthly. Online support groups connect people facing similar challenges, including a group specifically for college students. Live, moderated online chat sessions cover key topics. Camp Oasis, a camp for children living with IBD, is held in several locations throughout the country each summer.

FUNDRAISER

Take Steps Indianapolis, which raises awareness and funds to support patient programs, education efforts and research, was June 14 at White River State Park. Help CCFA Tackle Crohn's and Colitis will be Nov. 14 at the Indiana Farm Bureau Football Center.
